

School-age years can be stressful.

Let's talk about it.

Homework, bullying, peer pressure, grades, social media. On some days it may all seem like too much. That's when it can really help to talk with someone. Of course, family and friends are a good place to start, but where can you turn if you'd rather not talk with someone you know?

That's where the School Support Line comes in.

The School Support Line is a no-cost, confidential service that puts students and families in touch with mental health professionals who know how to listen, ask the right questions, and offer advice. And it's available around the clock for you and for members of your family.
